This morning after our last wonderful breakfast at the Scottish B & B, we said our goodbyes to Brenda, the innkeeper, and scurried over to

to see how our Moho was doing. (As you can see the bodywork has been completed beautifully!) Today we were getting it back to live in and because Brenda had new guests arriving we were being displaced from the B & B. When we arrived at Precision, the coach was nosed into a shop while the 3M shield was being applied to the front but we had full access to it. Sam, though nervous when we left (I think she relates car rides to vet visits), was very relieved to be returned to familiar territory and she immediately settled in. I was able to unload all our stuff from the car and put it away in the Moho while it was parked in the shop and Rick organized some stuff in the outside storage areas.

This afternoon the Moho was moved to the Travel Supreme service yard where we can stay in it until 6:30 AM tomorrow when it will be pulled into the shop to have the door reinstalled correctly. With some extreme luck there will be no extra painting to be done and we can leave tomorrow otherwise we will have to wait until Monday. Either way we are just happy to be in our "home" at last!

Providing the door doesn't have to be replaced with a new one, we won't have to be out of our Moho overnight again while we are here. Tonight we are going to The Five Feathers restaurant in Bremen with our friends Don and Dee to celebrate getting our house back and perhaps even our last night in Indiana for a long while. Oh, how lovely would that be??
